

reality of the situation is that things won't change in matter of seconds, days, or even decades. But that does not make the cause worthless or hopeless. For times to change there must be individuals constantly seeking that change. As newer generations take over, new ideas come to light and remove the ways of the old. The key to ending racism and bigotry is teaching our children to be kinder and more informed. We must stop the spread of misinformation and make a point to only voice the truth. I still hold the belief that mankind can evolve and see past manipulated political groupings and you should too. Pessimism has never changed any belief or foundation. But love and hope breed new beginnings everyday. I see that in my own friendships. I see that in the hopes and dreams of my generation. I see that in my grandparents and how much has changed in their own life times. I see that in our 44th president. We have the potential as a society to become anything that we desire to be. But we must come together to truly end the ignorance and fear that has destroyed and altered so many lives. Because if any of us face inequity then all of us suffer from inequality.
